KNOW YOUR RIGHTS

- Excessive force: Prison officials have a legal duty under the Eighth Amendment of the Constitution to refrain from using excessive force and to protect prisoners from assault by other prisoners.
- Religious discrimination: Prison officials cannot impose religious beliefs or practices on you. They cannot punish you for declining to take part in religious activities or events that include religious elements. Prison officials cannot give special preference to members of one faith, or treat prisoners of some religions less favorably than those of others.
- Trans rights: If you notify prison officials that you are transgender, and/or have been threatened, officials are legally required to act to protect you. When you enter prison, inform staff you are transgender or believe you are at risk — both verbally and in writing.
- Pregnant in prison: You have the right to an abortion if you want one, and to refuse an abortion if you do not want one. You have the right to prenatal and other medical care for your pregnancy and postpartum care. You cannot be forced to pay before you can get the medical care you need.
